CEO SALARY SURVEY

WA companies use mix

Our comprehensive annual survey of chief executive remuneration shows wide variation across companies.

6-PAGE FEATURE

IGHTY Perth-based executives earned total remuneration in excess of $1 million in the last financial year.

That's broadly in line with the results of CEO remuneration surveys compiled by Business News over the past decade, where the number has averaged 89.

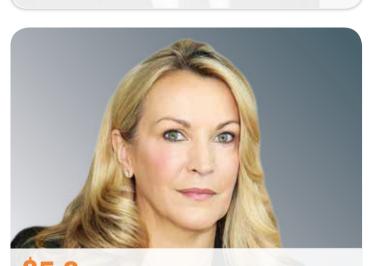

The chief executive with the highest statutory income was Ian Testrow at heavy equipment supplier Emeco Holdings, who earned $11.4 million.

He was followed by chief executives at some of the state's largest companies, led by Woodside Petroleum's Peter Coleman, whose total income was $8.8 million.

Others near the top of the survey included Rob Scott at Wesfarmers, Elizabeth Gaines at Fortescue Metals Group and Graham Kerr at South32 (see table, page 24).

$11.4m - IAN TESTROW
Emeco Holdings
Total income was greatly boosted by $9.4m in long-term equity

$5.0m - ELIZABETH GAINES
Fortescue Metals Group
Base salary of $1.65m is third highest in WA

The total figures disguise very wide variations in the remuneration packages paid to senior business executives.

There were 13 Perth-based executives with a base salary in excess of $1 million.

Once again, this group mostly worked at the state's largest companies, such as Woodside, Wesfarmers, South 32 and Fortescue.

Casting the net wider, the survey also showed there were 57 executives with a base salary in excess of $500,000.

This included the likes of Jim Beyer at Regis Resources, Ken Brinsden at Pilbara Minerals and David Bailey at Australian Finance Group.

There has been a trend away from short-term bonuses, particularly those paid just in cash.

Nonetheless, there were still a dozen executives who were paid bonuses in excess of $500,000 last financial year.

The big upside for chief executives comes in the form of equity-based incentives.

The survey revealed 34 executives earned equity incentives valued at more than $1 million last year.

The biggest of the lot went to Emeco Holdings' Ian Testrow.

$8.8m - PETER COLEMAN

Woodside Petroleum

Total income fell 14%. Base salary ($2.6m) still the highest in WA but cash bonus fell to $824,000

$3.7m - DAVID SINGLETON

Austa

Total income jumped 55% on back of higher long-term incentives

His total remuneration last financial year included $9.5 million in long-term equity in-

This mostly related to incentives granted three to four years ago when Emeco was seeking to complete a major restructuring and several acquisitions.

In terms of the company's current incentive plan, Mr Testrow qualified for just 85 per cent of his maximum possible reward in FY19.

Mr Testrow also received a 15 per cent increase last year in his fixed remuneration, which came in at just above $1 million. Executives with large base salaries, such as Peter Coleman, Graham Kerr and Rob Scott, also received large equity incentives.

That's because incentive schemes are usually based on a multiple of their base salary.

At the other end of the market, junior miners and explorers with limited cash at their disposal often use equity incentives to reward their chief executives.

Prime examples last year included Tungsten Mining, African Gold, Tietto Minerals and Canyon Resources.

of pay strategies

$6.9m - Graham Kerr

South32

Bonus and incentive payments of $5.1m were 3-times base salary

$6.7m - ROB SCOTT

Wesfarmers

Has a high base salary ($2.3m) and share-based payments ($3.9m) but small annual bonus

$3.0m - CHRIS ELLISON

Mineral Resources

Base salary stayed at $1.5m but total income fell sharply, as value of equity incentives reduced

$2.8m - TOM O'LEARY

Iluka Resources

$1.4m base salary was unchanged but value of share-based payments declined.

Protest votes

The opportunity for shareholders to vote on the adoption of annual remuneration reports at annual meetings continues to be contentious.

One of the biggest protest votes this year was against NRW Holdings' remuneration report, with 44 per cent of votes cast being against the report.

At last year's annual meeting, there was an even larger protest vote, with 49 per cent against.

As a result of these 'two strikes', the company was required to put a spill resolution.

As usually occurs with spill resolutions, it was resoundingly defeated – only 6.6 per cent of shareholders voted to spill the current board.

Nonetheless, the mood of shareholders – and the views of proxy advisers, who advise institutions on how to vote – was revealed in a third vote.

When shareholders were asked to approve a new incentive scheme for chief executive Jules Pemberton, 47 per cent of votes were cast against the resolution.

Another company to attract a big protest vote, for the second year in succession, was Sydney-based Harvey Norman Holdings, with 47 per cent against the remuneration report.

Mineral Resources copped a 63 per cent protest vote at its 2018 annual meeting but this year the against votes were a much lower 16 per cent.

Wesfarmers received a 21 per cent protest vote against its remuneration report this year – a highly unusual experience for the Perth-based conglomerate.

Chairman Michael Chaney spoke for many company directors when he talked about executive remuneration.

"I have to say that it is an extremely frustrating issue and one which takes up a large amount of director time – not in designing pay systems but in endeavouring to satisfy the often divergent demands of external stakeholders," Mr Chaney said.

He acknowledged there was increasing unease about executive remuneration.

Mr Chaney explained the Wesfarmers' board sought to balance community and investor expectations with the need to reward its executives appropriately.

"This is, in our view, more challenging than ever, with the emergence of private equity, with its potentially high rewards out of the public gaze, as an alternative to listed company employment," he said.

Mr Chaney said four out of five proxy advisers recommended a vote in favour of the remuneration report, and that Australian institutional shareholders overwhelmingly voted in favour.

"Foreign shareholders appear to have simply followed the recommendation of the one proxy adviser outlier," he said.

"This highlights how frustrating the issue of satisfying all stakeholders on remuneration matters can be."

Mr Chaney said Wesfarmers' incentive plans had been designed to focus executives' minds on achieving superior shareholder returns over the long term.

"As an example, for our managing director and chief financial officer their variable remuneration from this year will comprise only shares which vest or become unrestricted over four to six years," he said.

"They will not receive any short-term cash payment."

The main performance measures in Wesfarmers' scorecards are profit and return on investment, but also include some strategic measures in the interests of avoiding a shortterm profit focus.

"These measures, which are often but not exclusively non-financial, are opposed by a number of investment managers as being insufficiently specific and reward executives for just doing their job," Mr Chaney said.

"We feel strongly, on the other hand, that we set ambitious targets and that the achievement of those strategic goals is essential to long-term shareholder wealth creation."

Mining executives Bill Beament and Raleigh Finlayson have highlighted the way in which equity incentives can deliver big returns.

Mark Beyer

mark.beyer@businessnews.com.au @AMarkBeyer

UNDER the leadership of executive chairman Bill Beament, Northern Star Resources has become one of Western Australia's most successful companies.

With a market capitalisation in excess of $6 billion, the gold miner is the fifth most valuable company headquartered in the state.

In light of this success, the company's board announced two months ago that Mr Beament had earned a big pay rise.

His base salary will nearly double, from $725,000 to $1.4 million per year. Only five other chief executives in WA will have a higher base salary.

Mr Beament also has the potential to earn annual bonuses and long-term equity incentives.

That explains why his total remuneration last financial year was $3.1 million.

Most of this – $2.2 million – was the valuation attributed to performance rights granted to Mr Beament.

Under his new remuneration package, Mr Beament has the potential to earn up to $7.2 million via cash incentives and performance rights.

The real value of equity incentives, whether they are share options or performance rights, is only known when they vest and are exercised by the holder.

In Mr Beament's case, three million of his performance rights proved to be worth $28.7 million.

The rights vested in mid-October, following the achievement of defined performance hurdles over a period of three years.

By exercising the performance rights, Mr Beament received three million fully paid ordinary shares at zero cost.

With Northern Star shares trading at around $9.58 when the rights were exercised, this equated to a benefit of $28.7 million

Voting at this year's Northern Star annual meeting suggests there is some sensitivity around this matter.

While only 2 per cent of shareholder votes were cast against the company's remuneration report, there was a 41 per cent vote against the granting of a further 535,000 performance rights to Mr Beament.

A final note on Mr Beament – the conversion of his 2016 performance rights meant he incurred a $6.4 million tax liability.

To help fund the tax liability, he raised $4.5 million by selling just over 500,000 Northern Star shares last month.

His timing was not ideal – the taxable value regarding the performance rights was set when the shares were trading at $9.58.

His subsequent share sale was at $8.99 per share.

The discrepancy between statutory pay, as published in annual reports in accord with current accounting standards, and realised pay, is the subject of an annual review by consulting group Ownership Matters for the Australian Council of Superannuation Investors

The consulting group calculates realised pay by adjusting reported pay but then adding the value of any equity incentives that vest during the year.

On this basis, it found Qantas chief executive Alan Joyce was Australia's highest-paid chief executive last year.

It estimated Mr Joyce's total pay in FY19 was $23.8 million, as he reaped the rewards of a long-term incentive plan.

By comparison, Mr Joyce's reported pay in Qantas' annual report was much lower at $10 million.

Mr Joyce had been granted millions of shares in 2014 when they were worth $1.26 each and they vested in 2018 at $5.66, the report said.

A surprise inclusion in its top 10 listing was Saracen Mineral Holdings chief executive Raleigh Finlayson.

The review said Mr Finlayson's realised pay was $11.3 million after adding the value of performance shares that vested during the year

By comparison, Saracen's annual report stated that Mr Finlayson had total remuneration of $1.9 million.

Business News has reported on many other chief executives and company directors who have benefited from the vesting and conversion of performance rights.

South32's Graham Kerr received $8.1 million worth of ordinary shares following the vesting of rights in August.

He sold around $4.8 million worth of shares on the same day to cover his tax liability.

Austal managing director David Singleton received ordinary shares worth $4.98 million following the vesting of 1.19 million performance shares on September 9.

Westgold Resources managing director Peter Cook received ordinary shares worth $4.55 million, following the vesting of 2.25 million performance shares on September 4.

NRW chief executive Jules Pemberton converted 625,000 performances rights worth $1.5 million into ordinary shares on August 30.
